The start was made at 3:40 P. M. from the same spot near Calais that Blériot started from. De Lesseps promised to return if the weather was not too thick.

He ascended gradually and made a big circle to the left over the land. He then sailed out over the coastguard station at a height of 300 feet. After bearing westward along the coast for half a attendance on him, the siren of which signalled the route.

At 4:17 he landed in a field near St. Margaret's Bay in the presence of two or three people, who although at first they could hear the whirr of the motor were anable to see the monoplane owing to the fog until De Lesseps gradually descended from a height of 1,000 feet. He had been compelled to fly above the fog. After leaving France he soon passed from the sight of those on the torpedo boat. He kept at a much greater height than Blériot all the way across.

On landing he was quite cool. He said that from starting he heard nothing and Colonel's Ambition to Make Anglo-Gersaw nothing until he reached the English coast, when he sighted Dover Castle. His compass was useless for the reason that it turned round and round. He was compelled to rise above the fog and to steer by the sun.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUS. PARIS, May 21 .- A squabble is now on over the reengagement of Delna for the next season of the Metropolitan opera company, and it had a noisy epilogue at the première of "Aida" at the Châtelet Théatre to-night

Some of the Royalist newspapers have already expressed dissatisfaction with the situation, and a letter is printed attacking Toscanini and Gatti-Casazza. It plainly hints that Gatti-Casazza's object to obtain the decoration of the Legion of Honor. To this Gatti-Casazza refuses to reply in the press, but he told the corespondent of THE SUN that his purpose in giving a season in Paris was to show the French capital the high standard of opera lemanded by New Yorkers.

During the first entr'acte to-night the gallery started clamoring. When Toscanini took the leader's desk he was received with loud shouting and hissing. He ignored the hostile demonstration and began conducting. The extraordinery row continued, and when the curtain was raised nothing could be heard. The occupants of the boxes and stalls applauded, thus adding to the noise.

For a time it was feared that the permile he shot over the torpede boat in formance would be stopped. The situation was saved by Miss Homer, the American singer, who with the greatest pluck attacked her solo and coolly continued

This For its first evening appearance here the sky meanderer didn't hand the public quite all it expected, for it was simply a dull glow above the western horizon in a break of the clouds, with a faintly discernible spread upward and to the left not much longer than across the face of a full moon. But it was really there where it ought to be, and that seemed to the watchers a good deal better than a cancelled engagement.

> For just about half an hour the comet permitted itself to be looked at and then it dipped down into the mist above the storm clouds that fringed the Jersey shore. on the lookout from Riverside Drive defined its position as almost directly under the two bright stars Castor and was about half way between the two stars and the horizon, he said, and its distance from the horizon was something like eighteen degrees, or one-fifth of the way to the zenith. To-night, it may be said for the benefit of those folks who took a look at the cloudy sky last evening and decided to remain indoors, the comet
